Dear Bruce:

It has been my experience, and through my participation with a variety of networking groups, I have learned that the level of one's success is directly related to their own efforts. That is, there exists a direct correlation, using the old adage of, you 'get what you give'.

Upon joining your group my expectations were new people, new opportunities, and results based upon similar efforts.

What I have experienced though 'floored' me. To my surprise, the methodology you employ at each meeting - threading the interests of each of the members; the value you bring - coaching each member through their presentations; and the consistent contact and follow up - to assure the success of the participant's as a whole is completely out of the ordinary.

For my firm, the results have been remarkable.

Bruce, once again, my experience in CFL is like no other network with whom I have been involved. I am glad to be a member, and would welcome any inquiries by prospective members showing interest in how CFL and you differ from all the others.

Thank you for making CFL work so well.

Respectfully,

Daniel G. Limmer, CFP
